CAMP MEETING AT VINEYARD GROVE.

Great Religious Demonstration—The Cottages and Tents-Over Ten Thousand Persons) Encamped for the Coming Week-Extensive Preparations.

MARTHA'S VINEYARD, August 22, 1870. The great annual camp meeting, so well known broughout the New England States in connection with Martha's Vineyard, will commence this evening. From all appearances it will be the largest ever held on the ground. At the present writing there is not a vacant cottage within the ground, while tents are being erected in all directions in the grows. Some represent churches in vacant districtions. Some represent churches in various districts ority of the cottagers own their own There is a wooden boundary or partition ing the camp ground, and all within the pale re supposed to come more especially for the reil-ious services to be held curing the week. Beyond the line of demarcation which separates religion from so-called profamity are constructed some de-gatful villas, which form quite handsome summer In fact, Martha's Vineyard & fast turning Ato a good watering place, and there is no reason thy it should not. The camp meeting generally vinds up the season, and in a day the dwellings are snantless. Owing to the numbers which attended over fifty new cottages have been built on ng distinct properties, belonging to different cor-ations. The price of cottages ranges from a few andred dollars up to three thousand and upward, hile the renting of one for the season costs about three nundred dollars. Most of them are luxuriously furnished and give evidences of great taste, winter making alterations and improvements, and, n addition to the facilities introduced, the government has established a post office on the ground. The land has undoubtedly increased value; several new hotels have been built, while a good, substantial wharf has been erected bout three-quarters of a mile from the one at Oak camp meeting is annually held, have put a wharf at Holmes' Hole harbor, and have extended it so that rtland and New York steamboats could land their passengers going and coming. It is said that of passengers going and coming. It is said that association will extend the base of their religious erations as far as Holmes' Hole. There is much position between the Oak Bind's Company and the np meeting association. The former are making enuous efforts to popularize the locality, but are, vertheless, running up prices; while the associan are anxious that summer residents should outmost the people within the pale of their jurisdical. In any event, the place has made considere progress.

number the people within the pale of their jurisdiction. In any event, the place has made considerable progress.

As aiready mentioned, the camp ground is thronged to excess. During the entire of yesterday prayer meetings were held, the Rev. Dr. Brown, the president, preaching, the inauguration sermon. Prayers were also said in the afternoon, and the immense congreation is being worked up to that state of religious onthusiasm which generally marks such demonstrations. There now begin to appear that characteristic long look and solemn aspect, that quietness and meekly bearing which ever distinguish camp meetings. No sound of joyousness is heard. Laughter would be prolanity. A regular routine is gone through, day after day, without variation, and the strictest rules in regard to temperance are rigidly enforced. Indeed, one might be inclined to question the stubborn and uninching manner in which some singular regulations are carried out. There is quite a large number of colored people in the camp, who also participate in the services. Some of them perform domestic labor for their white brethren, but the majority of them are on their religious dignity, and have not by any means a small opinion of themselves. Irreligious people have it that the whole camp meeting is gotten up for speculative purposes, and that not a few fatten on the strength of the pions dignlay. But there are always persons ready to circulate such rumors, regardless of their foundation. Howbeit the camp meeting at Martha's Vineyard will this year be the largest held for many years. Ice cream will not be sold on Sundars, and notices are extensively posted that vehicles containing pleasure parties will not be sold on Sundars, and notices are extensively posted that vehicles containing pleasure parties will not be additioned to the day at seven o'clock. A large tent has been erected in the centre of the grounds for the religious services, and is capable of accommodating over 5,000 persons. The first regular meeting will be held this afternoon.

WILSON THE MURDIRER.

Some Facts in the Previous Life of the Murderer of Warden Willard of the Connecticut [From the Hartford Courant, August 22.] There are many facts hitherto unpublished conserning the life of Wilson, who murdered Warden Willard of the State prison, which will come to right probably before the great criminal dies. The story of his life has not yet been in print. Much that the papers have published has been pure fiction. Public interest will not so much Much that the papers have published has been pure fiction. Public interest will not so much bentre in the details of his burglaries as in the accounts which may be given of his marvellous escapes from prison walls. There has not been so dexterous a criminal in the United States during the time of perfected prison discipline, as the history of his operations will show. As an example of his escapes, the writer, who has held many interviews with him, may here allude briefly to his hegira from the New Jersey State prison. He said he got away from there because the warden took him for a fool, and he wished to convince him to the contrary. He got from his cell into a ventilating flue connecting with a chimney, and crawled to the open air. Before his escape was discovered he was secreted. The first night out he broke into a country store, not six miles from the prison, and there secured a few yards of cloth, shears, needles, thread, &c., and before mo. To he got into the woods. Here and before mo. 'ng he got into the woods. Here be cut and made a suit of clothes, having provided and before mo... "g he got into the woods. Here he cut and made a suit of clothes, having provided for his keeping during the time required to complete the work by stealing and killing a chicken at a farm house on his way to the woods. Many criminals would not have had the pluck and confidence to risk a burglary for the sake of stealing what he did, yet it was necessary to his final escape that he should in some way dispose of his prison uniform. When his rig was finished he was as good as disguised in it, and straightway proceeded to the nearest depot and boldly took the cars. He read a description of himself and a reward offered in the depot. But he wasn't the man at all; he didn't answer the description. Details of the escape would do for a Dick Turpin novel. His burglary here in Hartford of Brown, Thompson & Co.'s store, was well planned and executed, and only a slip trapped him. He had secreted a part of his stolen goods in a corn shed in Berlin, and taking a bag or two of silks, drove to Meriden. He must leave his horse somewhere, and he drove it under a shed very early in the morning, near what appeared to be a farmer's house. He supposed, and naturally too, that a farmer lived there; but it happened to be a bank officer. Had Wilson known that he would have driven further on. "I'm not such a fool as that," he said, "to drive up to a bank officer's door; he would be suspicious of burglary any way; a farmer never would have suspected." The hired man on the premises discovered the team and reported to the bank officer, who at once had the Meriden officers notified, and Wilson and his companions were arrested. It is doubtful if Wilson would have been caught if his feet were sound; but both being amputated, he is not the man he was. He said to the writer:—"I saw the situation of things at the depot before I got there, but I knew it was of no use to do anything but face it; I could not renble, but when his own powers of escape were weakened they said that he was forced to "go tit alone." In this he lost two-th there is something about the singular curves of his mouth which tells of cunning and treachery.

THE CAUSE OF THE DECAY OF THE SHIPPING INTEREST— WHAT MUST BE DONE TO REVIVE IT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:-Down to the year 1853 the American ship was in great demand, because, being constructed by talent and controlled by skill, she was constantly improved, and thus kept the lead as the best and best manage I ship in the world, the pride and envy of the nations. But at this time, for well define reasons which we will not mention, a highly re markable decay commenced; our ships began rapidly to decline in value. To account for it it was said that steam was superseding sails. During the war, and for two years after, the decay was charged to it: when this could no longer be done it was the said that fron ships were better than wooden ships; and now it is said that what is needed is cheap ships. The shifting character of these pretended causes proves them to be mere apologies, miserable subteringes resorted to to conceal from ourselves and others the only cause, which was and is the lack of best and best managed ships. There was a time when the British shipowners were greatly distressed because their vessels could not obtain prontable employment, and they petitioned their government to give them relier from the then superior American ship. Their government, instead of resorting to subterfuges, sought out the truth, humiliating as it was, that there was not so much difference in the ship as there was in the shipmaster; that the American common school system produced a superior man. This was equivalent to saying that the success of our ships was attributable to possession of greater tutents and to more skiffor management, because we as freenen enjoyed superior intellectual advantages. This truth the shipowner received, and at once set about improving the talents and skill of those that managed their ships, and they have since reaped a rich reward because of the wisdom of the course pursued. If we would revive our shipping interests, if we would also reap a rich larvest, we too must look humiliating truths in the face, and we must receive and be guided by them as men valuing their manhood shound—as true men will. Our shipping interests were destroyed by snipowners adopting and pursuing a course the direct opposite of that that was advancing the British shipping interests os much. In the year 153s merchants, to prevent progress, took a stand against li; they said the ship was then perfect, and that she should not be further improved. A former president of the New York Chamber of Commerce and a large shipowner told the writer that "that body would never be willing to admit that the American ship was in any respects wrong." To prevent progress talent and skill were banished from their management the foreign element was largely introduced, and wealth and its funkles assumed the control. Since then not an improvement has been made, and few have dared to suggest any; newspapers have closed their colours and riggers have been aspecially careful to build and rig the lew vessels constructed on old fog

FINANCIAL AND COMPARCIAL.

WALL STREET,
TURSDAY, August 23-6 P. M. }

was the single item of interest in the several markets here to-day. The altered aspect of the war news withdrawing from the market that opposition to a rise which was offered by the German bankers during the receipt of despatches favorable to Prussia, the feeling in the room, based upon various theories, appeared to be all on one side, and the advance was steady throughout the day with only slight fluctuations, the highest figure of the premium being reached at the close of business.

The inducnces operating to this were first, no doubt, the change in the military situation. The constant and it appeared uninterrupted successes of the Prussians had become so ntified with a falling premium that it was a natural result that their first reverses should be easly applied. In addition to this the of the state of the bond market there helped this conclusion. The first price there represented bonds to be 82%. Later the noon quotation was reported 88% a 88% and the price at the close 88 a 88%. Consois showed a fractional decline in the middle of the day from their opening figure, going off from 91% a 91% a 91% a 91% a 91% a 91%, which, it was supposed, indicated the same feeling in England in respect to the war news as prevailed here. In the afternoon, however, these recovered and closed steady at the first figures. A further influence operating to advance the pre-mium was the circulation of a report, which obtained considerable credeace in the room, that A POOL had been formed for that purpose, and that already large sums had been bought with the object of making a squeeze. This report could not be traced to any source whence further particulars could be obtained, and although the scheme is possible it is quite as probable that the suspicion originated in the favorable opportunity which the recent heavy loss of specie on the part of the banks and the con tinued drain for exports affords now for carrying it out. Besides, it is doubtless recollected that about this time last year originated the conspiracy which resulted in the famous September gold corner, and the fear of history repeating itself may be in the minds of many of the sufferers by that incident, especially as its chief promoters still move in the same sphere, more admired for their cleverness than reprobated for the ruin they brought about. A more reasonable solution of the change in the condition of the market is to be found in the which, notwithstanding the purchases of yesterday, caused a demand this morning for cash gold, the loaning rates ranging from 1 and 2 per cent for carrying to flat and 1 and 2 per cent for borrowing. It would not need much prudence to prevent one going short of gold on the eve of such a great battle as is now impending, especially considering how imperfect is our knowledge of the condition of the oposing armies, nor would it be considered overcaution for one who was short to cover at such time. In view of these facts it would seem as Lealigh there were quite enough in the NATURAL CAUSES perating upon the market to bring about the advance of to-day, after all less than one per cent, with-out a dreaded "corner," which it is sincerely hoped for the honor of Wall street may, in this instance, turn out to be a myth. One such holocaust as that of the Black Friday a year ago ought to satisfy the nost devoted worshipper of Mammon. The subjoined table shows the

[From the Elmira Advertiser, August 22.]
Reports reached police headquarters about half-past tweive o'clock yesterday afternoon, that a woman had been shot through the head in the vicinity of the factory. City Marshal Kress and officer Watson immediately proceeded to the place indicated and arrested George Van DeBogart, the perpetrator of the crime. The person shot is Bridget Hannihan, wife of Michael Hannihan. The ball entered her cheek, cut the root of her tongue and palate and lodged in the opposite side of her neck, producing a very dangerous, if not a fatal wound. She was attended by Drs. P. H. and John M. Flood, who rendered such surgical aid as her condition required. The weapon with which the shooting was done was a four shooter, requiring a good sized cartridge, which Van DeBogart surrendered to the officers who made his arrest. The cause of the disturbance, as we learn from the officers, was that the woman Bridget claimed to have cause for being jealous of her husband Michael and the wife of Van DeBogart. To vent her spite upon her rival she therefore proceeded to stone her residence, which was situated upon the lot adjoining her own. The glass is reported to have been broken in several of the windows. This conduct was not relished by Van DeBogart, and he fired upon the woman Bridget, with the result above indicated. The arrested person was confided in jail and the circumstances attending the shooting will probably be inquired into to-day before Recorder Muler. At the time of our latest information the wounded woman was still alive and as comfortable as could be expected from the character of her wounds.
